North of the Kansas river and east of the Blue, portions of the valley were injured by cutting and by the accumulation of sand. The soil over a large part of the area was greatly benefited by the flood. South of the Kansas river just below Manhattan heavy washing was done, cutting up the fields badly and piling sand in many places, so that much damage was done. Just west of St. George, on the north side of the river, the Union Pacific track was washed out and the land between the track and the river principally covered by sand. Also, about one-half way between Manhattan and St. George, at the place where the river makes the large sharp bend south, the land on the south and concave side of the river was badly washed and much sand deposited. Wamego rests on a sort of second bottom, a few feet higher than the river valley proper. The water did not cover this higher ground, and therefore the town was entirely uninjured. But the valley land south of the river along the concave side of the bold curve was greatly affected. On a farm belonging to Mr. Willard, a deep channel was cut which unearthed buffalo bones and bones of other animals that doubtless had roamed the valley ages ago, and left their skeletons to be covered as the river gradually built up its flood-plain. The deep cutting here came near...
