Although Martinez knew not a word of English, he interpreted my meaning in an instant, particularly as to enforce it, I had levelled my double gun at his head, of which all the Spaniards I ever met out here have the greatest horror and detestation. Less than an hours more painful labour, took us clear of this horrible place. Half-amile further on we came to a deep and rapid I was so much interested about this animal, from his piteous countenance when Martinez was going to stab him, that I subsequently enquired what became of him, and found that three days afterwards he rejoined his own herd in the coral. 144 LESSON IN SEAMANSHIP. current, two hundred yards wide, and, as the next part was more than a mile from the opposite bank, we were obliged to cross, horses and all. The only means of conveyance was the trunk of a tree slightly hol-owed, a mere apology for a canoe, with one small paddle. How they would manage to get this lumbering float across without being carried down by the stream, puzzled me extremely; so I struck a light for a cigar, and watched the proceedings of my two active and intelligent men, pretending to know all about it; though really, getting a lesson in seamanship, from two uneducated Gauchos. They commenced by divesting the horses of their harness, and putting it and the mails into the rude canoe; they...
