Excerpt: . as a pictorial arrangement, a portrayal of humanity, and a colouristic achievement, is an indisputable masterpiece, and perhaps the most important and most mature work in all Norwegian painting. It is the first warm day of Spring. The young girl s invalid chair has been placed by the open window, and, languidly reclining on the pillows, she sits and breathes the air that sighs through the room. A light breeze laden with the fragrance of the fields at this moment fills the window curtain, so that it swells like a sail. As if in gratitude the glance of the convalescent is directed toward her aged mother, who is seated knitting close by, and who eagerly scans the expression on the invalid s countenance. No words are uttered, but the silence is full of quivering expectation, while the vernal sunshine floods every corner of the simple interior. There is another canvas, earlier in date, but with a similar motive, although quite differently handled, entitled The Sick Child, of which a later replica may be seen in the present exhibition. Out of warm twilight tones gleams the pale profile of a child with a halo of reddish golden hair. At her side appears the kneeling form of the mother, bowed in grief. The lines of composition are incomparably blended in this picture, over which flutter the shadows of the wings of Death, and in which two beings, so fondly united, are about to be gently...
