By Marc A. Caruso

Dog Ear Publishing, LLC. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 288 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.0in. Graduating high school and going off to college: there's no way a former boozier and hellion, aka Cam Lantuzzi, would ever get that chance. But Cam found a way, and a fresh start for the young outspoken liberal might be his ticket to happiness. Houston Central College is only about an hour away from his conservative hometown of Kinsey, Texas, yet worlds apart in tradition, diversity, and ideas. Especially ideas like dating someone from a different race. A slim African American girl named Randess Houghton plays the part. Intrigued by the outspoken Cam, she wants to know more. So do others, and a few of the curious onlookers aren't too accepting of their budding romance. The pressure from parents, friends, and bystanders begins to mount. Can the couple handle it? More importantly, can they stay safe in the grips of a racist group's misguided hate? Hate much more serious than a passerby's condemning glance. Cam's earlier years in Kinsey were a mess. He was a troublemaker. Wrecking a car and skipping school were all in a day's work. He felt a duty to flaunt...
